

Appendix A. Web Site list

While the web site of The Avodah Institute already provides many links to other web sites with related interests, I have suggested several more here. It may be helpful for Avodah's web site to categorize links according to organization type to guide browsers looking for think-tank organizations that provide scholarly and ministerial resources and those looking for Christian development agencies:

Association of Christian Economists (UK)—This group is not affiliated with the American ACE, and their web page contains a 30-page bibliography on faith and work.

<http://www.aber.ac.uk/~arh/ace.html>

Business Ministry Institute in Korea—Located in Seoul, BMiK serves a purpose similar to that of The Avodah Institute for Christian businesspeople in Korea. Unfortunately, the web site is in Korean. (See Appendix F.x for translation)

<http://www.bmik.co.kr>

Pittsburgh Leadership Foundation—This foundation supports leadership development in the Pittsburgh area.

<http://www.ontv.com/pghlead/history.html>

Trinity Forum—This organization promotes leadership development and renewal.

<http://www.ttf.org>

Opportunity International—Like MEDA, Opportunity supports microenterprise development in poor countries as a way to integrate ministry to workers' spiritual and economic lives.

<http://www.opportunity.org>

Business & Professional Network—BPN facilitates Christian investments in the small businesses of believers in developing countries.

<http://www.bpn.org>

Christian Reformed World Relief Committee—This organization promotes economic development in poor countries from a Christian Reformed perspective.

<http://www.crwrc.org>

Chalmers Center for Economic Development—Located at Covenant College in Georgia, Chalmers trains Christians to minister to the poor through economic development.

<http://www.chalmers.org>

Engineering Ministries International—This Christian organization coordinates short-term ministries for American architects, engineers, and surveyors to use their skills in developing countries.

<http://www.emiusa.org>